

COVID-19 and the St. Paul School of Evangelization

At the St. Paul Evangelization Institute, we recognize that the world has been grappling with a serious pandemic due to the novel coronavirus. Praise God that our doctors and scientists have made significant progress in lowering the number of infections and deaths and are working on new treatments. Our institute has been following the guidance of health experts in determining how to best move forward and keep our students, missionaries, and those we are evangelizing safe.

Our parish schools will operate safely in each community. For some schools, that may mean things will be close to normal, with classes meeting at the parish and taking part in normal evangelization activities with new safe distancing guidelines where prudent. For some schools, classes may need to meet virtually for a time. Virtual schools will still have the ability to do lectures, small groups, and activities. Evangelization live labs may be altered to fit current state and federal guidelines for social distancing. Students for whom it would be ill-advised to go out for a live lab may complete alternative evangelization work.

If you have any questions, please direct them to your school's faculty leader. You may also email the national office at info@stpaulse.com.
